Excerpt: . . . was called stifenecked and stubborn, and that, after all, it only possessed an amount of consistency and unity which really resembled heroism. Still I thought it scarcely possible that the New York correspondent should have permitted himself such a slip, and on looking more closely, I found that the letter came from the special correspondent above mentioned. This anecdote will illustrate the general tendency of these remarkable letters. They are one long effort, lasting for three years, to shut his own eyes and the eyes of his countrymen to the existence of any heroic qualities in the people amongst whom he lived. It must have been an irksome task for a generous mind, and it is nothing short of sickening for any man of common feeling to read as a collected whole. We might take it as an agreeable bitter at intervals, but any one who follows my example...
