CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 158 pages. Dimensions: 8.0in. x 5.0in. x 0.4in. Sometimes I can see Lucifer, or at least the version of him that appears around my house. He is a big man, probably six and a half feet tall, built like a lumberjack. His bushy hair, wild beard and ample mustache are bright red, his eyes an intense, steely blue. Lucifer keeps his hands in his back pockets a lot, and he paces around in a circle constantly, working on his ideas. I have never noticed Lucifer having any horns or a tail, but he is a fairly imposing character anyway. It is a good thing that Lucifer appears in spirit form, otherwise he would be knocking down walls. Lucifer never said, but I imagine that the image I see of him has some parallel to a body he currently inhabits here on earth. Lucifer is getting his temper up; says he does not want me to spend much time writing things that are not directly his words. He does not mind me sticking in my little bit here at the front, but he wants me to get out of the way and start delivering the important stuff. His stuff. Lucifer asked me to remind all you critics and professors to remember what he said about insulting any of his pet writers and to take him for his word, because Lucifer never lies. He never has to. Lucifer says I can shoulder in a couple more paragraphs of my own, as long as they are about him. According to Lucifer, a lot of the worlds spiritual problems are caused by psychiatrists, psychologists, philosophers, and pretentious morons who claim to be psychic. Lucifer insists that such people are among...
