Not illustrated. 1823 Excerpt: .from the observations made by the European travellers who first penetrated into that continent, it appears undeniable that slavery must have prevailed from time immemorial among such of the tribes as had never carried on any commerce with foreign nations. When Battel first visited the Giagas, those people had never before seen a white man; yet they welcomed him and the English, with whom he had come, to their country, invited them to bring their goods on shore, and without hesitation loaded the ships with slaves. The Giagas were indeed waging war with the kingdom of Benguela; and being cannibals, who prefer human flesh to all others, the slaves whom they had sold to the English were probably prisoners they would have killed and eaten if they had not found an opportunity of otherwise disposing of them to greater advantage. But as they had not been incited by the Europeans to eat their prisoners, there can be no reason to suppose that by the Europeans they had been first induced to sell them; for we have seen that this kind of commerce prevailed in Africa among people much more polished than the Giagas so early as in the reign of Jugurtha. That it was not introduced among the negroes either by the Arabs or by the Portuguese, appears still more evident from the behaviour of the Dahonians at the conquest of Whidah, and from the manner in which the people of Angola at the earliest stage of their...
